

National Water Monitoring Day Celebrated in Riverside

Students pick up water quality monitoring field supplies at National Water (Quality) Monitoring Day in Riverside, California, October 19th, 2002. This national event marked the 30th anniversary of the Clean Water Act, landmark legislation which requires all the nation's degraded waters be improved to become fishable and swimmable once again.

This year, World Water Monitoring Day is being recognized currently, from September 18th to October 18th 2003. For more information on this event, or to participate, visit the following web site:
